St. Louis, MO / (314) 444-7842

Lindsey Bruno brings strong advocacy skills and a collaborative approach to resolving complex commercial, intellectual property, and employment-related disputes.

Lindsey is an associate in the Litigation Department at Lewis Rice. She represents individuals and businesses in a wide range of disputes, with a focus on complex commercial litigation and intellectual property matters. Lindsey also advises employers and management on personnel issues and defends against employment discrimination claims.

During law school, Lindsey served as Chief Notes Editor for the Washington University Law Review, where her published Note—Genital Exceptionalism Has No Place in the Law: Improving Transgender and Intersex Rights in the 21st Century—received recognition for its forward-thinking legal analysis. She also chaired the Honor Council Hearing Panel and gained hands-on experience as a Rule 13 student attorney in the Children’s Rights Clinic.

Lindsey’s leadership and advocacy skills were evident early on. As team captain of her undergraduate mock trial team, she earned nine outstanding attorney awards and led her team to its first appearance at the National Championship Tournament in 2017. She also brings a global perspective to her practice, with professional working proficiency in Spanish.

Lindsey was selected for inclusion in the Missouri & Kansas Super Lawyers “Rising Stars” list for 2025.

At Lewis Rice, Lindsey contributes to firm culture and talent development as a member of the Recruiting Committee.
