St. Louis, MO / (314) 444-7791

Marlee Rowe advises clients on federal takings and government contract matters, offering practical guidance informed by her experience with federal claims and regulatory processes.

Marlee practices in the Litigation Department of Lewis Rice, focusing on federal takings and government contract matters. As part of the Firm's Federal Takings & Rails to Trails Practice Group, Marlee works closely with individuals and businesses affected by rail-trail conversions, which occur when the federal government repurposes abandoned railroad corridors into public parks or trails. She also assists government contractors with claims and disputes, guiding clients through the procurement process, bid protests, contract negotiations, and regulatory compliance.

Prior to joining Lewis Rice, Marlee served as a law clerk at the United States Court of Federal Claims, where she drafted and researched judicial opinions on topics including federal takings law, bid protests, government contracts, and military pay law. This experience provides her with a strong foundation in federal claims procedures and enhances her ability to deliver informed and effective legal strategies.
