St. Louis, MO / (314) 444-7771

Meagan Nydegger represents clients in intellectual property and commercial litigation, bringing technical insight from her background in nuclear operations and engineering.

Meagan practices intellectual property law in the Litigation Department of Lewis Rice. She represents individuals and companies in a range of disputes, including complex commercial and civil litigation. Her work includes matters involving patents, trademarks, and trade secrets.

While attending law school at Saint Louis University, Meagan served as a summer associate at Morgan Lewis and as a legal extern for Emerson. She also worked as a law clerk for the Federal Public Defender's Office.

Before entering the legal profession, Meagan held leadership and technical roles in the energy and research sectors. She served as Chief of Operations at the National Institute of Standards and Technology Center for Neutron Research and worked as a Nuclear Duty Officer and Senior Reactor Operator for Southern Nuclear, where she was licensed by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.
